Home Price Appreciation Edges Higher in August

Home price appreciation picked up again in August (as reported this week), but the improvement was minimal.

The FHFA House Price Index rose 0.3% from July to August, bringing annual appreciation to 2.4%. July's previously reported monthly gain was revised down from 0.3% to 0.2%. Regional results remained uneven, with annual appreciation ranging from 0.5% in the Mountain division to 4.4% in the East North Central division.

Case-Shiller's national index rose 2.1% year over year, up from 1.9% in July. The 10-City Composite gained 3.6%, while the 20-City Composite rose 2.7%.

Even with the recent improvement, the inflation-adjusted trend remains negative. Consumer prices rose 3.4% annually in August, well above the 2.1% increase in national home prices. That gap has persisted for more than a year, offering some relief on a relative affordability basis even as elevated home prices and mortgage rates continue to challenge buyers.
