No major surprises in the Fed announcement or dot plot. We knew they would be pricing in fewer rate cuts in 2024. The median view technically moved up to 5.125 from 4.625, but notably, 5.125 is also the lowest possible rate seen at the end of the year.

In other words, the dots are very hawkish, and they account for the modest weakness seen after the announcement.

10yr yields are still down 11bps on the day but up several bps from the lows at 4.29.

MBS are still up more than half a point, but down a few ticks from the highs. Negative reprices are a consideration unless these losses reverse course soon.
