

Lower Rates Spark a Jump in Refi Applications

A drop in interest rates pushed mortgage applications sharply higher last week although nearly all the gains belonged to refinancing. The Mortgage Bankers Association (MBA) said its Market Composite Index, a measure of mortgage loan application volume, increased 6.9 percent on a seasonally adjusted basis from one week earlier and was 6.0 percent higher before adjustment.

The Refinance Index was 16.0 percent higher than the prior week and 59 percent above the level one year ago. The refinance share of mortgage activity topped 40 percent for the first time since March 2022, moving from 38.2 percent the prior week to 41.7 percent.

The seasonally adjusted Purchase Index increased 1.0 percent and 0.3 percent before adjustment. It was 11.0 percent lower than the same week in 2023.

“Mortgage rates decreased across the board last week and mortgage application volume reached its highest level since January of this year,” according to Joel Kan, MBA’s Vice President and Deputy Chief Economist. “The 30-year fixed rate fell to 6.55 percent, reaching its lowest level since May 2023, following dovish communication from the Federal Reserve and a weak jobs report, which added to increased concerns of an economy slowing more rapidly than expected. As a result of lower rates, refinance applications increased across all loan types, particularly for VA loans, and were almost 60 percent higher than it was at this time last year and were at its highest level in two years.”

Added Kan, “Despite the downward movement in rates, purchase activity only saw small gains, with an increase in conventional purchase applications offset by decreases in government purchase applications. For-sale inventory is beginning to increase gradually in some parts of the country and homebuyers might be biding their time to enter the market given the prospect of lower rates.”
