Bonds Snooze Through Fed Minutes

MBS Recap | Matthew Graham | 4:18 PM

At first glance, and based on conventional wisdom, today's most relevant calendar consideration for the bond market should have been the 2pm release of the Minutes from the most recent Fed meeting. In reality, however, it would have been hard for bonds to care any less. This isn't a surprise considering we already knew the Fed discussed cutting in July and has all but promised to cut in September. The day's biggest source of inspiration was the confusion surrounding the scheduled 10am release of the QCEW payroll data as discussed in the AM commentary.
