It May Have Seemed Like a Bad Day, But...

MBS Recap | Matthew Graham | 5:07 PM

Ever since topping out last Thursday morning, bonds have been steadily recovering. Each subsequent trading day has seen lower closing yields with yesterday's roughly matching NFP Friday's, also incidentally the lower end of the prevailing range at 3.80%. Whether it was a range-bound bounce or the result of decent economic data, bonds respected the range and moved several bps higher today. It may have seemed a bit overdone at times, but consider the closing levels under 3.86% in a 3.8-4.0 range. Volatility risks increase on Friday with Powell's Jackson Hole appearance. Drama is not guaranteed, but there's a chance the market walks away with increased clarity regarding the Fed's play book for early September data and the size of the rate cut.

Lock / Float Considerations

- Bonds are in a holding pattern with 10yr yields just under 4% until further notice. Risk and reward remain have been muted all week as evidenced by the minimal day to day change through Thursday. This changes, somewhat, heading into Friday with Fed Chair Powell scheduled to speak at Jackson Hole.
