Finally Cooling Off Just in Time to Heat Up Again

MBS Recap | Matthew Graham | 5:21 PM

Much of the past week has been spent monitoring the "post-Fed correction"--a nominal pull back in the impressive rate rally of the past several months following last week's Fed announcement. If you prefer "buy the rumor, sell the news" on the Fed rate cut, it's the same thing. By the end of this week, the correction finally looked to have leveled off, even if it got a bit of help from cooperative econ data. The timing is frustrating for those looking to predict the future as next week brings us even more squarely into a data-driven episode for bonds/rates. The not-so-frustrating thing is that the correction was never very large (downright small, even).

Lock / Float Considerations

- The post-Fed correction is now arguably winding down just in time for the coming week of data to set the tone. Risk averse clients are waiting for better evidence of new rally momentum. Risk tolerant clients are rolling the dice on weak econ data. Results could push rates in either direction, but the clients are joining the race on weak econ data. Results could push rates in either direction, but the biggest movement is reserved for the jobs report next Friday.
