Moderate Losses For Bonds as Powell Stays "Hawkish"

MBS Recap | Matthew Graham | 5:25 PM

In the lexicon of market watching, the Fed is considered to be dovish when they're saying things that are generally friendly for rates. When the opposite is the case, the term is "hawkish." Relative to expectations, the market felt Powell was hawkish at the press conference 2 weeks ago. Because of that, and because of the bond losses that followed, there was some false hope for a dovish counterbalancing act today. It wouldn't exactly be fair to say Powell was hawkish, but he certainly wasn't feeling compelled to throw the bond market a bone. The comment earning the most focus was essentially a reminder that the Fed is not in a hurry to cut rates and will be guided by data. This isn't really anything new, but bonds were modestly disappointed nonetheless.

Market Movement Recap

- 09:40 AM Chippy weakness overnight with a modest bounce back early. MBS down 3 ticks (.09) and 10yr yields up 1.6bps at 3.766
- 11:17 AM MBS now down 6 ticks (.19) and 10yr yields are up 2.5bps at 3.775
- 02:14 PM Weakest levels now. MBS now down more than a quarter on the day 10yr yields are up 4.7bps at 3.797
- 03:58 PM Modest bounce near the end of trading for the day. MBS still down 9 ticks (.22), but 10yr now up only 3.8bps at 3.788

Lock / Float Considerations

- The post-Fed correction is now arguably winding down just in time for the coming week of data to set the tone. Risk averse clients are waiting for better evidence of new rally momentum. Risk tolerant clients are rolling the dice on weak econ data. Results could push rates in either direction, but the biggest movement is reserved for the jobs report next Friday.
