

MBS & TREASURY MARKETS

Daily Coverage. Industry Leading Perspective.

The Day Ahead: When is a Rally Not a Rally? (Explaining "Big" Overnight Move)

Up until last Friday, 10yr Treasury yields had consistently closed at 4.27-4.28 last week. Now this morning, we're at 4.27-4.28 again. That's the shortest way to explain that we're not dealing with a meaningful rally. It's only impressive when considered against the weird, panicky starting point created by the weird, panicky sell-off on Friday.

Jason Delaney
Mortgage Lender, Haven West Mortgage

www.havenwest.net
P: (800) 992-1900
M: (909) 921-3623
jdelaney@havenloan.net
26632 Towne Centre Dr.
Foothill Ranch CA 92610
153213

Another way to put this morning's move into perspective is to remember that a 10-12bp rally right now is equivalent to a 3-4bp rally during more normal times. As for justification, the approaches are limited to two options: shifting election odds and/or a reversal of a pre-weekend position dump that's now being reversed--probably a combination of the two.

kalshi.com/elections

