Powell Rains on Bond Market's Mini Parade

MBS Recap | Matthew Graham | 4:34 PM

Today is a bit of a mirror image compared to yesterday. Bonds lost ground after the AM econ data and then began improving heading into the afternoon hours. Despite the gains, the yield curve suggested some apprehension ahead of Powell's speech/Q&A in Dallas this afternoon. Fears proved to be justified as Powell echoed colleague's recent quips regarding a slower pace of rate cuts than previously foreseen. This isn't a surprise considering the recent econ data, but confirmation was worth a bit more selling of shorter-dated Treasuries. MBS got swept up in that trade and ended up trading a 7 tick (.22) gain for a 6 tick (.19) loss as of 4pm ET. Fairly uneventful in the bigger picture.

Lock / Float Considerations

- The burden of proof remains on economic data to make a case for any significant improvement in rates. In other words, don't expect big, sustained improvement without markedly weaker data/inflation. Additionally, volatility potential remains elevated surrounding the election trade. This is an asymmetric risk environment that continues to heavily favor locking vs floating until further notice (this doesn't mean rates can't drop here and there, but it does mean there's not currently a reason for them to drop very much or for very long unless data makes a case for it).
