As has been and continues to be the case, there's an obvious counterpoint to any of these periodic surges: the broader context. In other words, yes, these are the highest levels since February, but even if we go back to February 2023, the range since then is historically low and sideways.

With that in mind, we're equipped to digest the refinance index with a grain of salt. At first glance, we might lament the evaporation of the recent surge in September.

But the broader context suggests that we can simply be in a perpetual state of lamenting refi demand for more than 2 years now.
