

Builder Confidence Remains Low, But Sales Expectations Are Increasing

The National Association of Home Builders (NAHB) and Wells Fargo publish the Housing Market Index (HMI) each month. The industry refers to this as "builder confidence" and December's number came out today. It was right in line with November's, and it suggests builders are increasingly honing in on a relatively gloomy baseline in the bigger picture.

There are several ways to approach the languishing of the index, with the easiest being some combination of single family construction (which capture the initial drop in 2022) and multi-family construction (which, along with persistently high rates, helps explain why the index may not have recovered). Both are charted below.

Jennifer Yoingco
Realtor, Walzel Properties
www.houstonsuburb.com
M: (832) 286-8636
Jenyoingco7@gmail.com
15420 Ridge Park Dr
Houston TX 77095
648293

Heather Woods
Branch Manager- Broker-Loan Originator, The Woods Mortgage Team-
Powered By My Community
Mortgage
www.WoodsMortgageTeam.com
M: (210) 392-8299
heatherwoods@myhomeloans.com
Humble TX 77346
833399

Ultimately, actual construction figures are a better indicator of the housing market than sentiment surveys, but the latter can offer some insight to trends and future opportunities. On that note, the component of the builder survey that tracks the outlook for 6 months into the future continues moving to the highest levels since 2022. As seen the following chart, it's less "sideways" and better described as gently trending higher.

6-Month Outlook

Other highlights from today's release:

- 31% of builders cut prices in December, vs 31% in Nov
- Average price reduction was also unchanged at 5%
- Sales incentives were used in 60% of transactions, also unchanged from Nov