Bonds Calmed Down After Early Weakness

MBS Recap | Matthew Graham | 4:38 PM

This week's relevant economic data is concentrated over the Tue-Thu time frame with Wednesday's CPI being the most obvious headliner. Today's session offered little by way of new information but nonetheless provided some insight as to how the market would approach this week's data. In a nutshell, bonds remain defensive. The burden of proof remains on weaker economic data or lower inflation if we're hoping to make a case for lower rates. "Dip buyers" are not looking eager to step in front of the train of generally weaker momentum. All that having been said, things certainly could have been worse today and it was some small solace that bonds leveled off after early weakness and ended up almost sideways on the day.

Lock / Float Considerations

- Strong jobs report reinvigorates the upward trend in rates. The upcoming CPI data can take the pain to the next level or help create some support. In general, this is a lock-biased environment until such time as the data takes a cohesive and decisive turn in a rate-friendly direction. That's not to say there won't be pockets of short-term opportunities, but capitalizing on them would involve luck rather than strategy.
