Modest Gains Make For an Uneventful Week

MBS Recap Matthew Graham | 4:26 PM

If bonds had continued to sell off today, it would have made the week slightly more interesting, but even then, we would still be well under the high yields seen last week. As it stands, the combination of this morning's economic data and an undetermined source of inspiration a short while later left bonds in modestly stronger territory, thus making for a very flat week in the bigger picture. This is neither bad nor good, and also not a huge surprise given the very light data calendar. There are bigger-ticket events in the week ahead, including a Fed announcement (just tuning in for the press conference), GDP (1st look at Q4), and PCE inflation.

Lock / Float Considerations

As feared (or perhaps just a coincidence?), bonds weren't interested in extending last week's rally © MBS Live, LLC. All rights reserved. This newsletter is a service of MBS Live. without any compelling motivation from economic data. This has been and will continue to be a limiting factor for any hope of a meaningful rate rally. There are no scheduled market movers on the horizon until the Jan 29th Fed Announcement (and more importantly, press conference).
