

The Day Ahead: Recovering Overnight Losses With Help From JOLTS and in Spite of Oil Price Bounce

Bonds initially drifted into slightly weaker territory in the overnight session, but began bouncing back just after 9am ET. All this in spite of a quick spike in oil prices on an announcement from Trump regarding "maximum pressure" on Iran (intended to counter Iran's nuclear proliferation and "drive oil exports to zero"). Bonds continued improving after the mixed JOLTS data. Job openings aren't quite as low as they were at the cycle lows in August, but the drop was more than enough to offset the uptick in "quits." Both numbers correlate with rate movement (i.e. lower=lower and vice versa).

Kevin J. Hanna

President & CEO, Lions Capital Mortgage

lionscapitalmortgage.com

M: (503) 307-4453

kevin@lionscapitalmortgage.com

135 A Avenue
Lake Oswego OR 97034
1044502

