Bonds Give Up AM Gains After Powell Speech

MBS Recap | Matthew Graham | 4:01 PM

Bonds made it through the jobs report in good shape with modest gains intact heading into the PM hours. Things changed after that, with the most obvious turning point coinciding with Fed Chair Powell's speech. If traders had been hoping to hear Powell express some concern over economic momentum, they were disappointed when he said "the economy is fine. It doesn't need us to do anything, really." With that, bonds moved into negative territory and Fed Funds Futures moved back near the week's weakest levels (indicating slightly lower odds of the next rate cut happening in May).

Taken together, the past days suggest the bond market is experiencing some genuine resistance to the prevailing rally momentum. It's a good time for the less aggressive floaters to consider locking. Aggressive floaters may choose to wait for more weakness before getting to the next high consequence economic data (Wednesday's CPI).
