Uneventful Friday, Even if Slightly Weaker

MBS Recap | Matthew Graham | 6:21 PM

Friday's trading session was the most uneventful of the week. It began with moderate losses in the overnight session in concert with stock market gains. Some traders attributed this to improved odds of avoiding a government shutdown by tonight's deadline. The only scheduled economic data was the Consumer Sentiment report which has fallen by the wayside to some extent as the results are increasingly discounted as being clouded by political affiliations of respondents. Nonetheless, the uptick in inflation expectations was notable and worth a bit of extra weakness in bonds at the time. Even so, bonds remains well within the range set by yesterday's trading. The result is an "inside day" in market jargon, which one could either read as "indecisive" or "boring." We'd lean toward the latter.

Lock / Float Considerations

- Bonds/rates have generally been in consolidation mode after hitting last week's low yields. That's been mostly a sideways affair, but a breakout in either direction is possible. With this week's important data out of the way, the biggest risks/opportunities are on hold until next week. Government shutdown headlines are a wild card. If they resolve in a way that benefits stocks, that could cause some selling in bonds.
