Mixed Reaction to Retail Sales Makes For a Boring Monday

MBS Recap Matthew Graham | 4:12 PM

Despite coming in much weaker than expected, Retail Sales (the day's only big-ticket market mover) didn't provide much help for bonds. The catch was that the key internal component (the control group, aka retail sales excluding autos/gas/building materials) was stronger than expected. Bonds lost ground on the news, but began to rally about 30 minutes later. The net effect was essentially a restoration of Friday's average mid-day trading levels, thus making for a ho-hum Monday.

Lock / Float Considerations

Bands /rates have generally been in consolidation mode after hitting the best lovels in early March © MBS Live, LLC. All rights reserved. This newsletter is a service of MBS Live.

- bonds/rates have generally been in consolidation mode after mitting the best levels in early March.
- That's been mostly a sideways affair, but a breakout in either direction is possible. The biggest risk/opportunity on the near term horizon is Wednesday afternoon's Fed announcement (not due to rate cuts, which are a 0% chance, but instead due to the dot plot). Stock/bond correlation has been hit and miss.
