Explaining Monday's Wild Ride in The Bond Market

MBS Recap Matthew Graham | 5:46 PM

It was an extremely volatile, frustrating, and downright weird trading day for the bond market. After starting the overnight session near the lowest yields of the year, the rest of the day was dominated by heavy selling. Ask any market expert to predict today's movement based on a simple inventory of news and events, and a 17bp jump in 10yr yields would be on exactly zero bingo cards. That leaves us to try to piece together best guesses from a laundry list of potential contributors. These are detailed in today's video, but they include things like the inflation implications from trade policy, budgetary implications (lack of tariff revenue implies Treasury issuance), timid buyers ahead of this week's Treasury auctions, fear of reduced foreign bond buying, and a general move to cash as traders look for new opportunities created by recent chaos.

- 10:18 AM Additional losses on "tariff pause" headlines. MBS down 3/8ths and 10yr up 14.4bps at 4.151
- 03:40 PM Back to weakest levels of the day after a modest bounce. MBS down nearly 5/8ths and 10yr up 16bps at 4.165.

Lock / Float Considerations

Monday served as a sobering reminder regarding our warnings from last week. Specifically, rallies that are built on expected future impacts of yet-to-be-implemented ideas are notoriously at risk of major reversals and ongoing volatility. This is doubly true with the aforementioned "ideas" are subject to potentially significant changes (as could be the case for the tariff rate on any given country before and after they choose to negotiate). That said, we still wouldn't chalk all of Monday's weakness up to tariff-related trading. Either way, the takeaway is the same: it makes more sense to be defensive until we see how Treasuries are doing after this week's auctions and inflation data.
