

Volatility remains a risk, however, with the release of even more important economic data tomorrow morning. At 8:30am ET, the Labor Department releases the Employment Situation (the official name for what everyone simply refers to as "the jobs report"). No other economic data has a more consistent track record of inspiring change in the rate landscape. That said, keep in mind that the potency of any given report is all about potential. That potential is only realized if the results are much higher or lower than forecast.
