Bonds Brace For Stormier Weather After This Week's Smooth Sailing

MBS Recap | Matthew Graham | 4:47 PM

Despite a few inconsequential ups and downs, bonds ultimately traded with forgettable, sideways momentum this week. Friday did nothing to change that--especially after mid-day gains courtesy of optimism surrounding over-the-weekend trade talks between the U.S. and the EU. The gains corresponded with the news headlines about the U.S./EU meeting and bonds held steadily sideways after that. The incoming week is completely different in terms of calendar-based volatility potential. There are relevant events on every single day culminating with "peak relevance" in the form of Friday's big jobs report.

Lock / Float Considerations

- Inconsequential range trade ahead of the upcoming week that's chock full of big ticket events and potential market moves. From a lock/float/trick (covered) standpoint, that's really when things get potential market movers. From a lock/float risk/reward standpoint, that's really when things get interesting. Monday is the lightest in terms of scheduled events. Friday carries the biggest risks (jobs report).
