

New Home Market Remains Stuck in Neutral

The latest New Home Sales report showed little change in July, with sales holding very close to June's pace. The seasonally-adjusted annual sales rate came in at 652,000.

This marks a -0.6% dip from June's revised 656,000, and leaves sales -8.2% lower than July 2024's 710,000 level.

For all practical purposes, the pace of sales continues to run sideways, reflecting the same stable range seen over the past 2+ years despite periodic swings.

Big Picture Takeaway

July's new home sales data reinforces the recent pattern: demand is steady at best, but not accelerating. Inventory remains elevated, keeping months' supply near multi-year highs. While prices have softened meaningfully versus last year (reflecting lower square footage more than actual price declines), elevated housing costs continue to limit the benefit to buyers.
