Best Levels in Weeks Ahead of High Stakes Jobs Report

MBS Recap | Matthew Graham | 3:05 PM

Rather than circle the wagons and consolidate the recent rally, bonds kicked the buying into higher gear on Tuesday thanks to a surprisingly weak Retail Sales report for December. This can be added to the list of recent data that has urged the bond market to get in position for a similarly weak jobs report tomorrow. Nearly 15bps of improvement in less than a week means that jobs would have to especially downbeat for this pace to continue. If the report surprises to the upside, bonds are at risk of a reasonably brisk correction, but as always, the scope of potential volatility depends on the deviation from the median forecast.

The screenshot shows the MBS Live interface. On the left, there are two tables of bond prices and yields for 30-year, 10-year, and 5-year maturities. The middle section features a large play button over a real-time chart of the 30-year Treasury yield, which is currently at 3.00%. Below the chart is a news stream with a headline about the December Retail Sales report. To the right is a live chat window with several messages from users. The top of the screen has a menu bar with options like TIME, PRICING, CHART, NEWS, and SETTINGS.

Lock / Float Considerations

- High risk / high reward ahead of Wednesday's jobs report, but it bears repeating that there's some measure of "lead-off" priced into current levels. Set-ups such as this have preceded some explosive rallies as well as some painful corrections. No way to know which one it will be ahead of time. Tuesday's Retail Sales extended the rate-friendly lead-off and created a good lock opportunity for risk-averse clients.
