Bonds Close Out Epic Week of Resilience With Friendly Data

MBS Recap | Matthew Graham | 4:13 PM

Friday was a logically friendly day thanks to slightly lower CPI. But no matter what happened on any of the other 4 days, this week was all about bonds ending up at much stronger levels in spite of a jobs report that should have sent rates higher on Wednesday. Ironclad justification remains impossible, but the leading theory involves heavy liquidation mode in stocks/commodities on Thursday. Holiday weekend positioning could also be a factor. As such, we'll learn a lot more next Tuesday--especially if stocks find a reason to stage a big bounce.

The screenshot displays the MBS LIVE interface. On the left, a 'TIME PRICING' table shows bond yields for various maturities, including 10-Year, 20-Year, 30-Year, and 30-Year TIPS. The 10-Year yield is 1.0675%. In the center, there are two 'REAL TIME CHART' windows: one for the 10-Year Treasury (yield 1.0675%) and one for the 30-Year Treasury (yield 1.9827%). The 30-Year chart is highlighted with a green box and a play button, indicating a video segment. Below the charts is a 'LIVE NEWS STREAM' with a headline about the CPI. To the right, there's a 'CHAT' window showing a conversation between users, and a 'USER REPORTED PRICES' section with a table of current bond prices.

Lock / Float Considerations

- Thursday night was a coin flip for locking/floating. It ended up being rate-friendly thanks to CPI, but the moderate gains suggest the mystery momentum that fueled an impressive week for bonds is starting to wane. Risk-averse clients continue to favor locking in these scenarios--especially with rates basically matching 3.5-year lows. Risk-tolerant clients have that much more room to set overhead lock triggers.
