Why Bonds Are Rallying Despite Higher Oil Prices

Today's most notable development was a fairly large bond rally despite another uptick in oil prices. The leading explanation, by far, is the general notion that investors are increasingly worried about the economic impact of higher oil prices. There is no clean way to measure this in the short term, and even those espousing the notion are reluctant to conclude that it marks a turning point in the broader sell-off. For now, it was a nice way to start the week, even if it also drew strength from the positioning considerations discussed this morning.

Lock / Float Considerations

- 3/30/26 - Fairly big rally in bonds, but we're only 1 day away from the weakest closing levels in months. It has been and continues to be the case that it will take more than a day or two of apparent recovery before we can conclude rising rate pressure has run its course.
