

The Day Ahead: Modest Recovery Ahead of Econ Data

After hitting the highest yields in more than a month yesterday, bonds have managed to pick up a few bps. The bulk of the recovery was already in place by yesterday's close, but yields dropped another 2bps after war-related headlines just after 8am (US general said Iran's attacks yesterday were below the threshold for war). Oil prices and bond yields continue the same old correlation.

Jason R. Richardson

Gold Star Mortgage
Financial Group

RichardsonLending.com

P: (310) 810-3545

M: (661) 857-2202

jasonr@goldstarfinancial.com

2350 Green Road Suite 100B
Ann Arbor MI 4810-4810

NMLS#256859

Gold Star Mortgage ✨

Coming up at 10am ET, we'll get 2 economic reports that have historically been capable market movers: Job Openings and ISM Services. We've seen some evidence that the market is still willing to react to data if it's far enough from expectations, but that risk is a bit asymmetric at present. Reason being: investors are waiting for economic weakness to show up due to high fuel prices. So it doesn't take as much of an upside surprise in the data to cause bond market weakness. Conversely, if data is slightly weaker than expected, that would be less of a surprise to most investors and thus not as much of a benefit to bonds.