

The Day Ahead: Modest Recovery Ahead of Econ Data

After hitting the highest yields in more than a month yesterday, bonds have managed to pick up a few bps. The bulk of the recovery was already in place by yesterday's close, but yields dropped another 2bps after war-related headlines just after 8am (US general said Iran's attacks yesterday were below the threshold for war). Oil prices and bond yields continue the same old correlation.

Rachel Stevens

Mortgage Strategist |
Helping You Buy Smart and Build Wealth, Stevens
Lending | Powered by Xpert
Home Lending

www.gmgmlending.com/rachel-stevens

P: (585) 615-2578

M: (585) 615-2578

rachel@stevenslending.com

1035 Pearl Stret
Boulder CO 80302

NMLS 831678

Xpert Home Loans

Coming up at 10am ET, we'll get 2 economic reports that have historically been capable market movers: Job Openings and ISM Services. We've seen some evidence that the market is still willing to react to data if it's far enough from expectations, but that risk is a bit asymmetric at present. Reason being: investors are waiting for economic weakness to show up due to high fuel prices. So it doesn't take as much of an upside surprise in the data to cause bond market weakness. Conversely, if data is slightly weaker than expected, that would be less of a surprise to most investors and thus not as much of a benefit to bonds.