Labor, Land, and Rising Costs Push Builder Confidence to 3 Year Lows

Builder sentiment took a meaningful step backward in September, with higher mortgage rates, rising construction costs and worsening labor shortages weighing on the market for newly built homes. The National Association of Home Builders (NAHB)/Wells Fargo Housing Market Index (HMI) fell three points to 32, matching September 2025 as the lowest level in over 3 years.

Breakdown of various component indices:

| HMI Component | August | September | Change |
|---|---|---|---|
| Current sales conditions | 39 | 35 | -4 |
| Sales expectations | 43 | 37 | -6 |
| Prospective buyer traffic | 23 | 23 | Unchanged |

"Buyer traffic has weakened across much of the country, largely because of rising mortgage rates," said NAHB Chairman Bill Owens. Owens also pointed to higher material costs, rising gas and diesel prices and persistent labor shortages as ongoing challenges for builders.

NAHB Chief Economist Robert Dietz added that builders also reported difficulty finding available lots, with 42% rating current lot availability as poor and another 38% rating it as fair.
