MBS Recap: Strong Correlation With Stock Losses

Strong Correlation With Stock Losses

MBS Recap Matthew Graham | 4:21 PM

Bonds continue hanging back and letting other markets set the tone. For the most part, that's entailed a focus weakness in the stock market. In response, there have been multiple episodes of small-scale flights to safety in the bond market. Coming into the this week, there was a question as to how strong that correlation would be in light of last week's inflation-driven breakdown. As it stands, stock prices and bond yields are still doing a good job of moving in the same direction at the same time, but the magnitude of the movement in bonds leaves something to be desired. Bottom line: bonds started weaker and were only able to turn green because stocks sold off aggressively enough.

Lock / Float Considerations

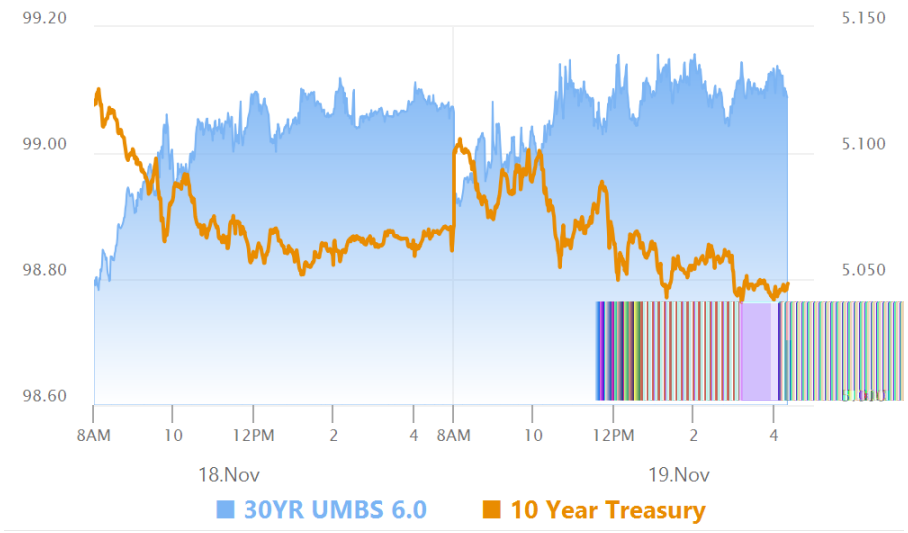

- 11/19/26 - Similar themes persist. Bonds have been able to find a ceiling in yields, but we have to wonder how true that would be if stocks were recovering as opposed to revisiting multi-month lows. The last time stocks were near today's levels, 10yr yields were 20bps lower. The time before that, they were 60bps lower. Bottom line: bonds are getting help, and it's not clear how well they'd be doing without that help.
