A Bit More Help From Stocks

MBS Recap Matthew Graham | 3:34 PM

Tuesday marked another rather uneventful day for the bond market. On this holiday week, without any big ticket econ data, stock market drama is one of the only arguable sources of inspiration. That played to our advantage today as stocks failed to build momentum following yesterday's big rally. In fact, the NASDAQ ended up giving back more than half of that improvement. Bonds were happy to follow that move, but not in any kind of exuberant way. NOTE: random volatility risks are higher on Wednesday and Friday due to the illiquid nature of Thanksgiving week trading.

Lock / Float Considerations

- 11/24/26 - The absence of follow-through for yesterday's stock market rally is a promising development for bonds, as is the reasonably strong correlation between today's stock losses and bond market improvement. For risk takers, it argues in favor of keeping options open, but keep in mind the heightened risk of random volatility surrounding the Thanksgiving holiday.
