Home Price Appreciation Remains Positive

Home prices continued to post modest annual gains in September. The S&P Cotality Case-Shiller National Home Price Index rose 2.1% year over year in September, matching August's gain. The 10-City Composite increased 3.5%, down slightly from 3.6% in August, while the 20-City Composite rose 2.6%, unchanged from the previous month.

Monthly results offered a somewhat more encouraging picture after accounting for seasonal patterns. The National Index rose 0.2% on a seasonally adjusted basis. The 10-City Composite followed the same pattern, while the 20-City Composite posted a 0.1% seasonally adjusted gain.

The latest FHFA data also showed continued appreciation, with national home prices rising 2.5% between the third quarters of 2025 and 2026. Prices increased 0.7% from the second quarter, although the seasonally adjusted monthly index was unchanged in September. All nine census divisions posted positive annual appreciation, led by the Middle Atlantic at 4.9%. The Pacific division recorded the weakest gain at 0.5%.
