Softer Start Despite Tame ISM Manufacturing Data

Market Summary: Monday, June 2, 2025 - 10:36AM

The ISM Manufacturing PMI has more potential than most economic reports to cause a reaction in the bond market, even if it isn't perfectly consistent. As today's only big ticket data, it was well positioned to set the tone this morning. While it may not be doing that in a resounding fashion, one could still argue that the weaker result is least helping bonds avoid additional weakness.

Ho-Hum PCE Inflation Data Leaves Focus on Month-End Trading

Today's PCE Price Index is one of the two main consumer inflation reports put out by the US government. It's bigger and broader than CPI, but CPI comes out 2 weeks earlier than PCE. CPI and other data also enable traders to forecast PCE much more accurately. Due to the staleness and lower surprise potential, PCE tends to not garner as much of a reaction. Today's installment was even less likely than normal to move the needle as traders are more interested in the evolution of the inflation narrative over the next 6 months or so, with the idea being to allow enough time for tariff policy to stabilize and for any price pressures to be passed through. With the top tier data out of the way, bonds are free to get pushed around by the random, sometimes large trade flows associated with various forms of compulsory month-end trading. for that.

Another Small Victory For Mortgage Rates

It has turned out to be a surprisingly calm week for and, as of today, largely a victorious one, even if the victories have been modest. Today's installment involves a 0.02% drop in the average top tier 30yr fixed rate. This brings the index to the lowest level of the week and a fairly decent 0.12% below last Friday's levels.

Most of this week's movement took place on Tuesday morning after markets returned from the holiday weekend. Movement has been minimal since then.

While economic data is a perennial source of inspiration for rates, none of this week's data had a major impact. In today's case, the PCE inflation data was in line with expectations, so it wouldn't have made a case for a rate reaction under normal circumstances, let alone the present environment in which that data is taken with a grain of salt as markets wait to see if tariff-driven inflation materializes over the coming months.

Calmer, Friendlier Week For Rates Amid Mixed Signals For Housing

In addition to being shorter than normal due to the Memorial Day holiday, there wasn't much meat on this week's event calendar- at least not as far as the rate market was concerned. Earnings releases caused some volatility in the stock market, but rates drifted sideways to slightly lower after a larger drop on Tuesday. Interestingly enough, Tuesday's drop was more to do with bond market improve...
