Almost No Reaction to Fed Minutes

Market Summary: Wednesday, August 20, 2025 - 11:40PM

As expected, today's Fed Minutes (a more detailed account of the meeting that took place 3 weeks ago) had very little impact on the bond market. Markets honed in on one newswire in particular which noted the Fed saw inflation risks outweighing employment risks. This, of course, is because the data had yet to more forcefully suggest employment risk at the time (2 days before the downbeat jobs reports). It's arguably more important that many Fed members view tariff inflation risks as a process that could take many more months to unfold. That leaves us in the same position as before: waiting for labor market data to really deteriorate before expecting any major additional rate relief. This could happen in as little as 2 weeks, but it depends on the jobs report. As for Fed rate cuts, September is still priced in, and December is just as likely as it was this morning despite some volatility in Fed Funds Futures mid-day.

FOMC Minutes: Ancient Time Capsule, Or...

By now, we've already said quite a bit about this week's scarcity of scheduled events with the power to motivate meaningful changes in the bond market. With that being the case, one might be tempted to consider today's FOMC Minutes as one of the biggest potential flashpoints and the first real opportunity to break this week's monotony. But that's probably wishful thinking. While we can't ever rule out the possibility that something in the Fed Minutes will catch the market's eye, the Minutes have been progressively minimized by the ever-increasing campaign for transparency--one that (dare we say) seems akin to "over-sharing" at times. In other words, we've heard from most Fed speakers in the 3 weeks since July 30th (the meeting that today's Minutes will speak to). Moreover, on July 30th, we had yet to see the bombshell jobs report, or the two relatively interesting inflation reports. Bottom line: don't confuse the Minutes with "new news" from the Fed. Our only shot at such things this week remains Powell at Jackson Hole.

Mortgage Rates Barely Budge

For the 11th straight business day, are very close to the levels from the end of the previous day. Over the past week, however, most of these small day-to-day movements have been microscopically higher. Today's is no exception.

The net effect is that the average top tier 30yr fixed rate is up from 6.53% last Wednesday to 6.61% today. Even that is a fairly minor move in the bigger picture, but it would certainly make for a weaker rate quote if Wednesdays happened to be your mortgage rate shopping days.

To put the overall change in specific, relatable terms, the average borrower would have to pay 0.4% in points to get the same rate quoted last Wednesday. This equates to $400 for every $100k borrowed.

Today's modestly higher rates were in place before the afternoon release of the minutes from the most recent Fed meeting (3 weeks ago). The minutes didn't offer any major new revelations beyond those already seen in recent weeks from individual Fed speeches.

Mortgage Rates Hit 10-Month Lows — Here's Why a Fed Cut Might Not Help

Inflation data was in focus this week, with one major report helping mortgage rates officially hit new 10-month lows before the 2nd report pushed back in the other direction. The biggest report, Tuesday's Consumer Price Index (CPI), was generally friendly for rates despite coming in right in line with forecasts. Some categories showed tariff-related price pressures, but easing in hou...
