More War-Related Weakness, But With a Supportive Bounce

Market Summary: Thursday, July 9, 2026 - 2:24AM

Bonds officially closed at the highest yields in more than a month. At one point just before the noon hour, the 10yr was just over 4.59, but ultimately moved back to 4.56. That's only about 1bp higher than yesterday's latest levels (which feels like a win compared to the mid-day trend). Oil prices and bond yields remain in a tight correlation, and once again, war-related headlines set the tone. The most notable among them was a Trump comment regarding the ceasefire being cancelled/over. As was frequently the case in the run-up to the signing of the MOU, it's hard to know which comments represent "tough talk" as opposed to legitimate shifts in policy and military activity. Trading levels reflect the same uncertainty (i.e. oil/yields are certainly higher, but also not nearly as high as they were in May).

Steady Selling; New Lows, But Limited Reprice Risk For Now

Bonds managed to stay mostly flat through 9am ET, but have been selling modestly and steadily since then. While the pace is gentle, it's adding up to the weakest levels of the day/week/month at this point.

MBS are down 7 ticks (.22) on the day and just over an eighth of a point from the earliest rate sheet print times. Reprice risk isn't particularly high just yet. Most lenders price late enough in the morning that they're only seeing about 2-3 ticks (.06-.09) of losses since rate sheet print times. Pricing also tends to be more conservative when lenders are tasked with printing rates during a downtrend in MBS.

10yr yields are up 3.3bps on the day at 4.585.

Mortgage Rates Back Up Near 10-Month Highs have moved higher at a moderate pace over the past 2 days as tensions between The U.S. and Iran see a resurgence. As far as the underlying bond market is concerned, most of the damage was done yesterday. But today's news added emphasis when Trump declared the ceasefire to be over.

Rates are based on bonds, but mortgage lenders prefer to set rates once per day and only change them if bonds make a big enough intraday move. That meant the average lender had to play some catch-up with bond market movement this morning.

All that to say that bonds didn't have nearly as rough of a day today even though mortgage rates rose just a bit more than they did yesterday. Perhaps that offers some hint that the underlying market may be reaching some sort of supportive ceiling, but it really depends on exactly how much the war re-escalates.

The average top-tier 30yr fixed rate is back up to 6.68%, matching its second highest level in more than 10 months. May 19th's level of 6.75% is the official 10-month high.
