Fake or Not, Hormuz Headlines Helping Bonds

Market Summary: Tuesday, September 22, 2026 - 1:12PM

Bonds began the overnight session in weaker territory and were mostly sideways until roughly 4:30am. At that time, newswires hit regarding an Iranian official suggesting to 2 separate news agencies that Iran could reopen the Strait within 7 days. That was the only part of the news that the market focused on, even though there were conditions and, later, denials. Oil prices dropped instantly and bond yields followed. Why would bonds move on potentially "fake" news? Because it's likely not actually fake. While we can only speculate, it's exceedingly plausible that some Iranian official did actually say things that were later denied by other Iranian officials who disagree about the country's war strategy. The only agreement that matters is between financial markets and our thesis in the last sentence.

Down an Eighth From AM Highs

MBS are now down an eighth of a point from AM highs (but just barely weaker on the day). Jumper lenders could already be considering negative reprices. Upward pressure in oil prices only explains some of the weakness (oil is still lower day-over-day).

Mortgage Rates Little-Changed to Start New Week

It was a fairly uneventful day for to start the new week. The underlying bond market was slightly stronger. This suggests slightly lower . The average mortgage lender lowered top-tier 30yr fixed rates by 0.01% compared to Friday.

Underlying motivation for the bond market can mostly be attributed to lower oil prices, which have been a common source of intraday inspiration for better or worse.

With today's drop, the average lender remains right in line with the rates they offered before last week's Fed rate hike.
